

Aerial view of Anaheim Stadium "The Big A" in 1966. Home to the Anaheim Angels. The Santa Ana Freeway can be seen at the top of the photo.

Laguna Beach lifeguard tower. The iconic tower was constructed in the 1920s as part of a gas station on the Pacific Coast Highway.

LA traffic was heavy even back in 1955. This shot is the 101 Freeway near the Arroyo Seco / Harbor Freeway interchange.

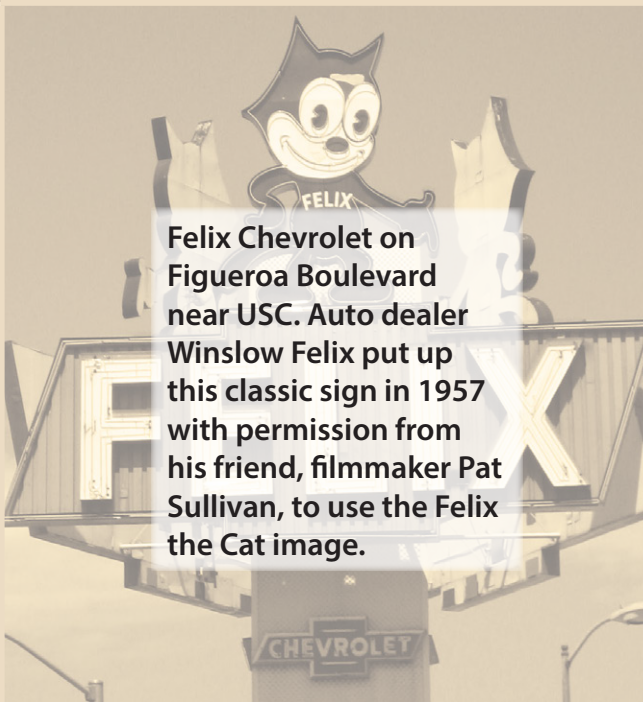

The Hughes H-4 Hercules "Spruce Goose" docked at Long Beach. At 400,000 pounds, it was the largest flying boat ever built.

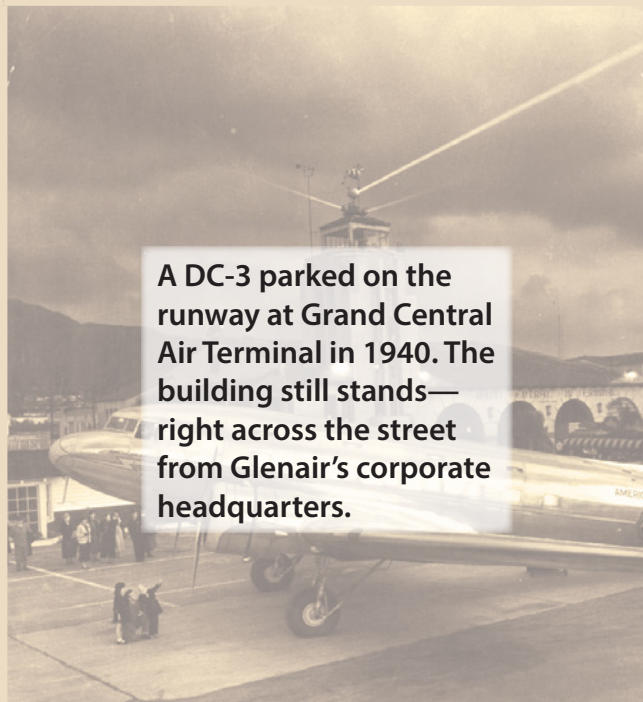

Philippe The Original, Chinatown, Los Angeles. Birthplace of the French Dip sandwich. Operating at this Alameda St. location since 1951.

Santa Fe San Diegan Streamliner train in 1945 at the San Diego depot.

Felix Chevrolet on Figueroa Boulevard near USC. Auto dealer Winslow Felix put up this classic sign in 1957 with permission from his friend, filmmaker Pat Sullivan, to use the Felix the Cat image.

A DC-3 parked on the runway at Grand Central Air Terminal in 1940. The building still stands—right across the street from Glenair's corporate headquarters.

At home in Southern California since 1956

Can you identify these iconic Southern California images?
Answers online May 15, 2014
www.glenair.com/qwikconnect

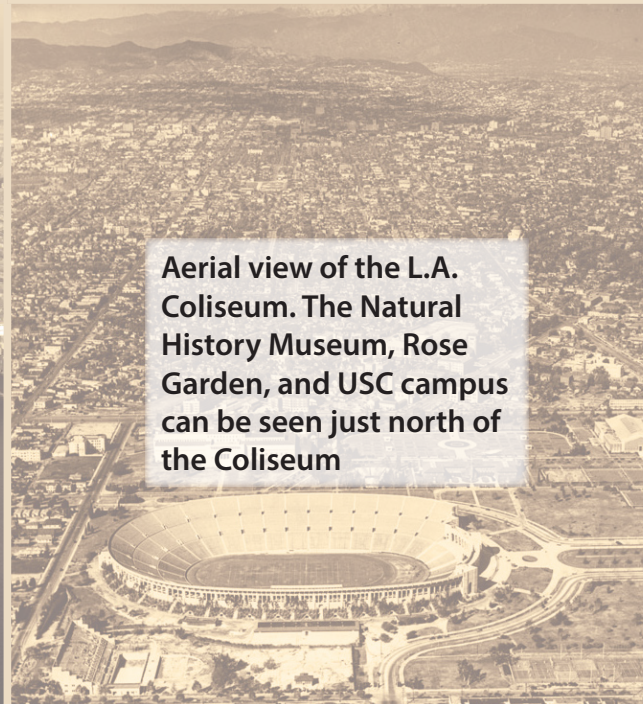

Disneyland—The Happiest Place on Earth—still under construction in 1955 in this aerial shot.

Cars leaving the stadium after a game at Dodger Stadium in Chavez Ravine, June 1, 1962.

The Port of Los Angeles in San Pedro. A cruise ship and cargo container ship can be seen in the photograph.

Aerial view of the L.A. Coliseum. The Natural History Museum, Rose Garden, and USC campus can be seen just north of the Coliseum

La Plaza Methodist Church in Olvera Street, the historical birthplace of Los Angeles. The church has been in continuous operation since 1926.